W. E. Gladstone Solomon, K-I-II., R.B.C., F.R.S.A., I.E.S., J.P.,

INTRODUCTION

The present Exhibition of Painting, Modelling, Architecture, and Art Crafts covers the years from November 1919 to December 1936, during which period the Bombay School of Art has been in the charge of its present Director, Mr. Gladstone Solomon, who will retire early in 1937. It therefore gives the public an idea of the progress made by the School of Art during the last seventeen years; from the time that is to say, when it was reorganised on its present lines.

This reorganisation, which from its early stages received personal and firm support from the then Governor of Bombay, Sir George (now Lord) Lloyd, initiated material improvements, indicated by the establishment from 1920 onwards, of classes of Mural Painting (supported by Government Scholarships), of Indian Design, of organised Drawing and Painting from Life, etc., and considerable expansions in the Architectural School.

During the period of activity under review in the present Exhibition, the School has taken a prominent part in many public enterprises connected with Art. In 1920 the first Mural Decorations by students of the Class of Mural Painting on the walls of the School of Art were unveiled by the Governor of Bombay. These were executed in oil on canvas, applied by the process known as "Marouflage" to the walls of the large gallery of the School, and to the alcoves in the verandah.

It is significant that although several of these panels have been exposed for sixteen years to sun and rain on an outside wall these paintings remain in sound condition, which shows this method to be suitable for India as for Europe; provided of course that due supervision and care of the paintings is maintained. That the students have learned to handle the methods of Fresco and Tempera with similar success, is demonstrated in various lunettes in the School buildings and in the upstairs verandahs.

In 1921 the students of Mural Painting designed and painted with Indian decorations, the Pylons used in the street decorations of Bombay, for the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to India. They also painted a series of decorations for the Darbar Hall at Government House, Bombay. Subsequently (in 1923), the students of various classes of the School, including the Lord Reay Art Workshops, carved and decorated with mural paintings a beautiful Indian Room for the Wembley Exhibition, an exhibit which, with its contents, found a most appreciative purchaser in England,—namely, Mrs. Thorpe of Datchet, who many years later was still so impressed with her purchase that she asked for and obtained the autographs of the artists who had been responsible for the Indian Room.

A request to be allowed to decorate a portion of New Delhi when the buildings came into being, had been put forward by the Director (who was then Principal,) as far back as 1920, as a part of proposed post-graduate courses for Indian students, the whole scheme being known as the "Prix de Delhi". Thanks to the strong support both of the Governor of Bombay, Sir Leslie Wilson, and the public, the School was eventually successful in its request, which was not only made on behalf of its students, but also for Indian artists generally. The students of the school of Art and several artists of Western India executed a series of mural paintings in the Secretariat Buildings at New Delhi, in 1929; some of the original designs for these decorations are on view in the present Exhibition. Unfortunately our request to be allowed to participate in the Decorations of India House, although well supported, was not successful no artists from this School or Presidency having been employed on these decorations.

The personal interest of the Governor, Sir Frederick Sykes enabled the New Delhi decorations to be illustrated in a volume entitled, "Mural Paintings of the Bombay School;" and it should here be gratefully mentioned that these and other developments owed a very great deal to the support of the Governors and of public opinion in Bombay, and to several prominent leaders, among whom, Sir Phiroze Sethna, Mr. M. R. Jayakar, and Mr. Kaniyalal Vakil, the well-known author and art-critic, have long rendered specially valuable help.

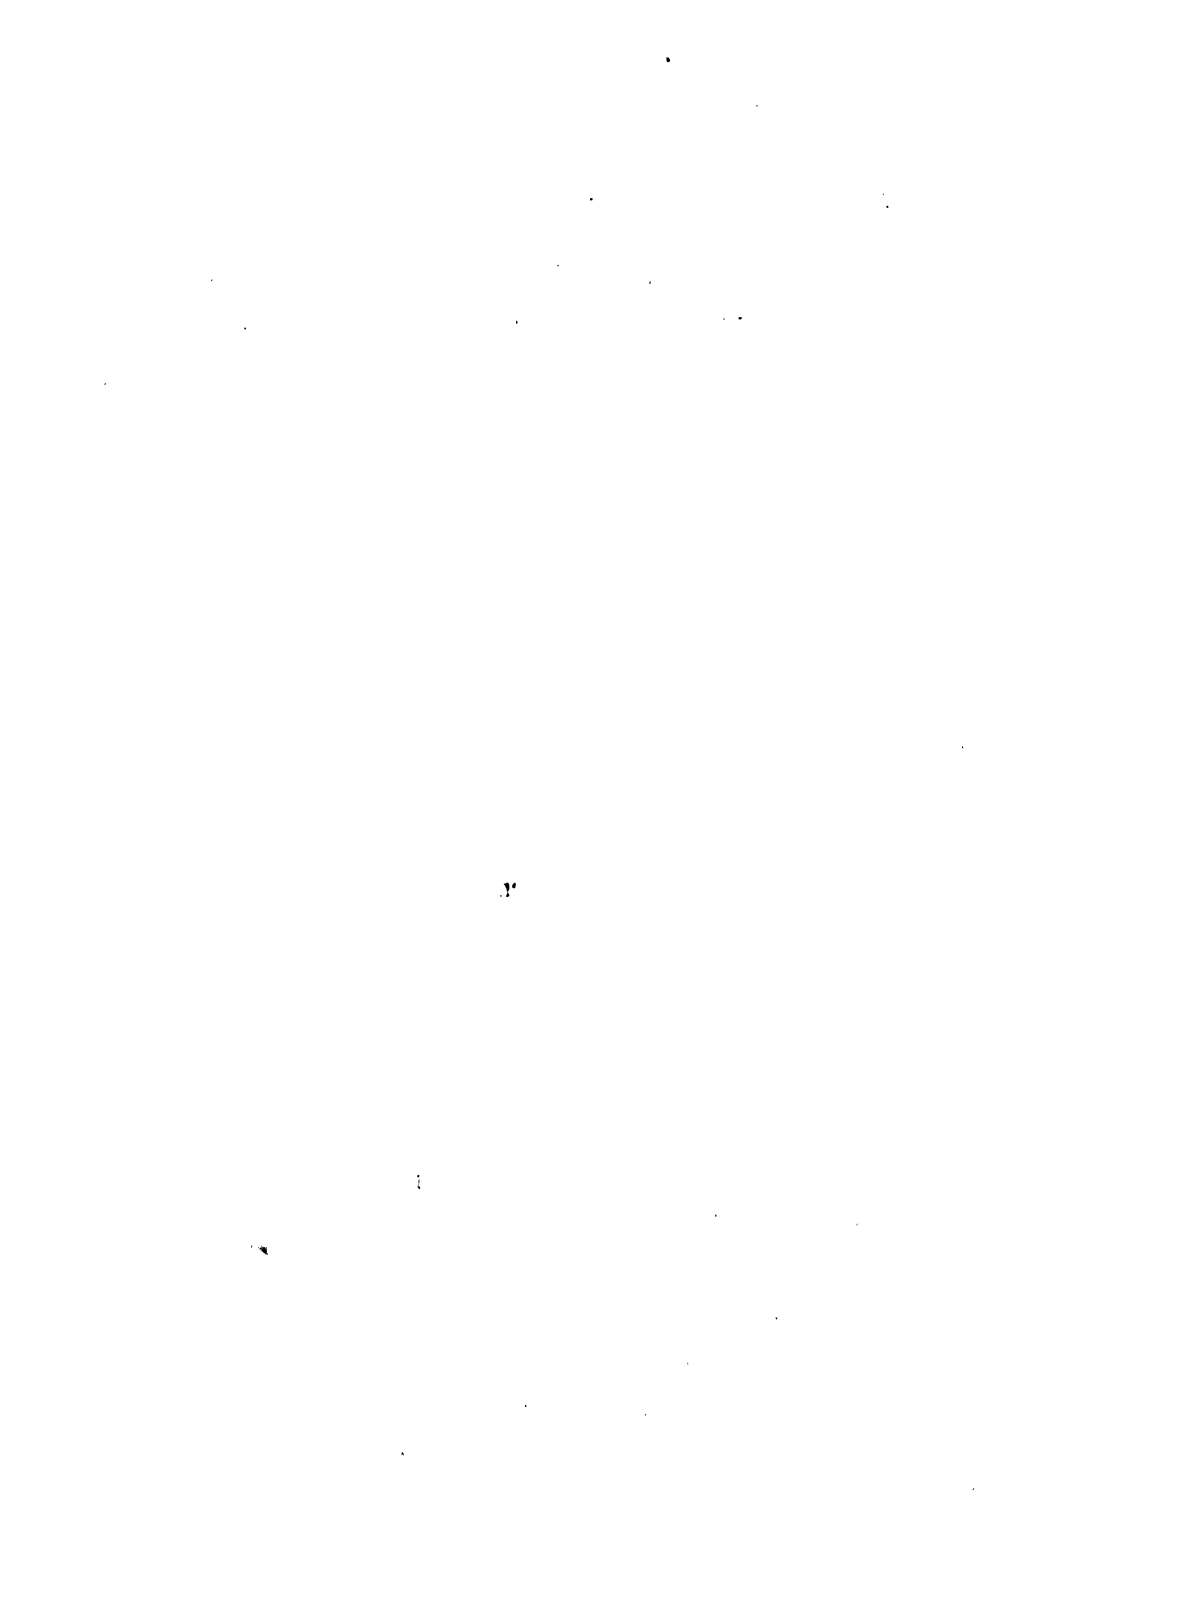

Two enterprises overseas marked the progress of the last decade. First there was the Exhibition of the Students' Work which was organised by the present Director on behalf of Government at India House, London, in 1930, with full success, being visited by Queen Mary, who selected a number of the students' works.

The other occasion was the Exhibition of Modern Indian Art, held at the New Burlington Galleries in London, in 1934, the sympathetic auspices of the India Society. Mr. Gladstone Solomon was deputed by Government to organise the Bombay Section of this Exhibition on behalf of the Regional Committee of Bombay, under the patronage of the Governor, His Excellency Lord Brabourne. The successful result of this Exhibition has been chronicled by Mr. Kanaiyalal Vakil in his recently published volume entitled, "Modern Art in Western India."

The students of the School of Art have painted decorations in the residences of Mr. Tricumdas Dwarkadas, and Mr. M. R. Jayakar; in the Baliwalla Theatre, in St. Joseph's Church, Colaba, etc. They have strenuously assisted many charitable entertainments in Bombay such as the great Red Cross Fete on the Cooperage, under Lord Lloyd's patronage, the "Five H Week" during Sir Leslie Wilson's administration, and numerous Charity Balls or Fetes involving the designing of theatre decorations, costumes, scenery, and accessories of one kind and another. Thus the School of Art has played its part by participating in the charitable activities of this City; while the students and ex-students have steadily improved their artistic reputations in the leading Exhibitions of Art Societies in India. This year they were strongly represented by their exhibits at the Simla Fine Arts Society's Annual Exhibition, and their work found a great many purchasers, including Her Excellency the Marchioness of Linlithgow, who acquired a picture by one of our lady students.

Indeed one of the most gratifying features to record has been the advance of the lady students. There were twenty four of these in the School of Art in 1919. In 1929 there were thirty, and to-day there are sixty seven, including Hindus, Parsees, Mahommedans, and Christians. Visitors to the Exhibition will hardly fail to be struck by the excellent quality of much of the work exhibited by ladies, in Painting, Modelling, and Commercial Art. One of the beautiful domestic arts of the Indian women in which the present Director has taken keen interest, that of drawing the "Rangolis" or powder pictures on the thresholds of their homes, is demonstrated by several talented Indian ladies in this Exhibition.

Since 1923 the Architectural School of the School of Art has had the guidance of an able Part-Time Professor, Mr. Claude Batley, who has supplemented the early morning sessions with Day Classes, and Saturday Morning Classes; and has brought to maturity a five years course which brings students up to the standards of the Royal Institute of British Architects' Final Examination, constituting the only first-class architectural courses available in India.

Another important Department of the School of Art, the Lord Reay Art Workshops, has had some trying set-backs during the period treated in the present Exhibition, especially through the abolition of its class of Carpet-Weaving, and the scholarships which used to be given to the students (who are all the sons of Indian craftsmen) and the imposition of fees. However it is surmounting its difficulties, and the excellent work executed under its present young and energetic Superintendent may be viewed in this Exhibition.

The School of Sculpture is a small but vigorous section, which, in order to extend, only awaits patronage, especially that of the architects, which used to come its way so liberally during the earlier days of its history when the students were employed on many public works in Bombay which still witness to the fact. This part of the Art School was formerly under Visiting Professors, but is now supervised by a Master of Sculpture.

The Commercial Art Section founded in 1934 is the most recent addition to the facilities offered by the School of Indian students in practical and much needed directions; and is under the personal supervision of a highly qualified Deputy Director, Mr. Charles Gerrard, who was appointed from England in 1935, and will succeed the present Director on his retirement.

The main features of actual development in the curriculum during the last eighteen years may be gathered by mentioning that there are 628 students in the School of Art to-day, as compared with 371 in 1919; that although no students had ever sat for the Government Diploma of Painting previous to 1920, no fewer than 148 have now passed this difficult examination in proficiency, including 14 ladies; and that during the same period 47 have passed the Art Master's Examination, including three ladies.

The developments in Painting, Drawing, Modelling, and Architecture have been marked by the success of many past students who took their training or part of their training within the period recorded in this Exhibition. Among them are many members of the present Staff of the School of Art, including one lady, who have done excellent work as artists and teachers of art. Many ex-students have won high distinctions abroad and in India. These include the first Indian student to gain the Gold Medal (Sculpture) of the Royal Academy of Arts of London; several other exhibitors at the Royal Academy and Paris Salon; an Associate of the Royal College of Art, South Kensington; the present Inspector of Drawing and Craftwork of the Bombay Presidency; and several winners of the Viceroy's Prize and other prizes of the Simla Fine Arts Exhibition, and of awards in numerous Art Exhibitions.

The School of Arts' students have become Portrait, Landscape, or Decorative Painters, Drawing Teachers, Illustrators, Poster Designers, Film Directors, Scene Painters, etc. etc., besides filling various Architectural posts of responsibility in India and other countries; for many of the Architectural students are now practising in India, and though their work is not represented in this Exhibition, it is all around us in Bombay.

The Reay Art Workshops with its skilled staff have continued to hold the confidence and to support the skilful traditions of the hard-pressed but gifted Craftsmen of India.

The most noteworthy change in the Bombay School of Art's constitution since 1919 was the conversion of the School into a separate Government Department under its own Director, in 1929. This gave it far greater freedom for development and influence, and has given the institution the unique position which it holds to-day.

The worst ordeal we have had to endure was the threat of the abolition of the Bombay School of Art, which was recommended and strongly urged (for reasons of Retrenchment!) in the Reorganisation Committee's published report in 1932. There was a great rally of public support for the School of Art, which emerged successfully from the controversy, perhaps strengthened by this acid test of its popularity.

The Bombay School of Art is probably at the present time the largest and most comprehensive art school in the British Empire. Its progress has been primarily due to the early recognition by the people and the Government of the essential unity of the Fine and Applied Arts, an ancient principle which India has always retained to an extent which may well be the envy of Modern Europe.

The Director takes this opportunity of warmly thanking the wide Indian Public, and the Press for their steady and powerful support during this formative period in the School of Art's history. He would also most gratefully acknowledge his indebtedness for the warm cooperation which he has enjoyed from all sections of the School of Arts' Staff of all Departments; not only throughout the events which have been briefly recorded here, but also on the Committee which, including several sympathetic helpers outside the School of Art, has given so much energy, zeal, and enthusiasm to the planning, organising, and arrangement of the present retrospective Exhibition.

The School of Art has now been placed in a position by which its students are enabled to benefit by a curriculum which recognises the distinctions of India's artistic Past as well as the technical resources of the West.

This is the unique achievement of this Institution, as the present Exhibition will go far to exemplify. It is now up to the country, and particularly to this Presidency, to see that this broad policy in Indian art education is maintained and carried on towards the highest point of achievement.

We have had to suffer from much uniformed criticism, and in that respect have had to face what the New Bengal School never had to face in the initial stages of its movement. But the Bombay School has survived that criticism; its staff, students, and ex-students may look forward to the time when criticism in India will be broader-based and better informed; when Art in the Bombay Presidency will have emerged from the petty distractions of local and provincial differences, and command a view of those spacious vistas of beauty and enterprise which lie before the talented Youth of all communities in this country, and constitute India's brightest national heritage.

A NOTE ON THE EXHIBITION

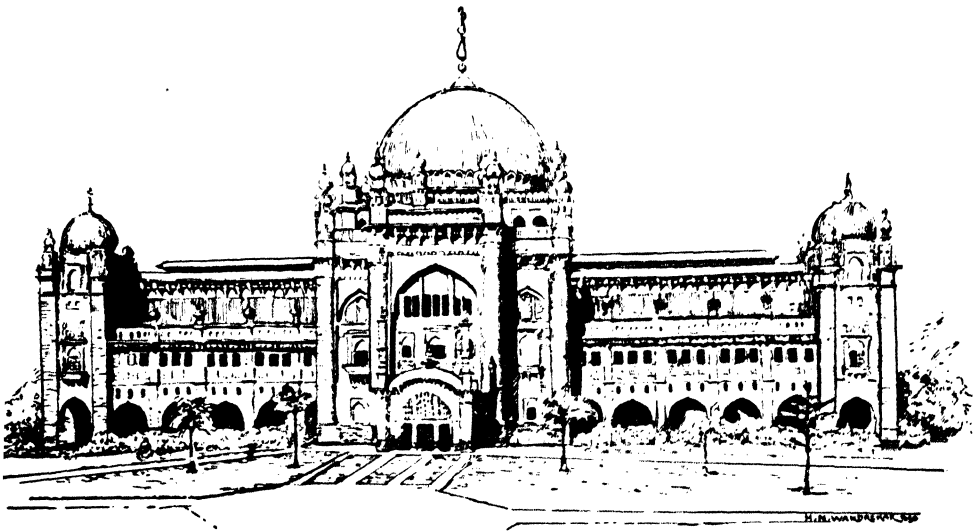

The works in this exhibition have been chosen specially to form a representative collection with a view to demonstrating the policy of the Bombay School of Art for the past 18 years. No attempt has been made to group the work in chronological order, but instead, the general effect of the exhibition has been considered. The result of the exhibition should once and for all dismiss the fallacy which, apparently still persists, namely, that the art of a country is confined to the revival of its ancient tradition. Visitors to this exhibition will see for themselves the comprehensive range of work which includes oil, tempera, fresco, and water colour, and the versatility which is evident by the large work seen in the cartoons and decorations so admirably adapted to mural decoration. This large scale work is the outcome of extended facilities for drawing from life which is a special feature of the Bombay School. Obviously, art need not be confined to the narrow mannerisms of any particular locality. Past history of other countries will also show that methods of expression which may have been imported from outside sources, have often been the means of enriching the art and culture of the particular country which has taken advantage of it, for the stream of art is ever flowing and will only come to standstill in a gully, to form stagnant water. The present exhibition can more than hold its own with many of the large Art Institutions in Europe to-day. This is undoubtedly due to its disciplinary organisation and its broadminded policy of art education. It is well to remember that the art of any country is often determined by the conception of its subject matter and iconography. Pure, abstract, aesthetic qualities underlying all great works of art are common to all great art the world over, irrespective of time or locality. These are matters which the sincere artist need not probe into. His natural emotions will guide and never fail him. He should be far too busy pursuing his work.
